Bridge End Garden Saffron Walden

A Victorian garden reborn...

www.bridgeendgarden.org

Bridge End Garden was created around 1840 by Francis Gibson, a local Quaker businessman who also built the Fry Art Gallery. Francis' daughter Elizabeth married Lewis Fry of Bristol and in 1918 the Fry family leased the Garden to the local council. It has been open to the public ever since.

Over time, the Garden fell into neglect. An ambitious restoration project took place between 2003 and 2008, it is now Grade II* Registered. You can learn more about the history and restoration in the Visitor Centre, located in the Walled Garden.

Bridge End Garden is a popular spot for visitors and locals alike. It is the perfect place for a summer picnic or to provide a quiet escape from modern life. Theatre and live music regularly feature within the Garden, with local school exhibitions and exclusive wedding marquee events.

Since 2010, the Garden has been managed by Saffron Walden Town Council, with support from The Friends of Bridge End Gardens, a charity formed to support the restoration, management and future development of the Garden.

The Friends welcome newcomers and volunteers to join them. Look out for our noticeboard near the Eagle Gates when you visit.

Francis Gibson designed the Garden as a series of interlocking 'rooms', each with its own unique character.

The Hedge Maze was replanted in 1984 with over a thousand young yews. In its centre is a viewing platform. The Maze is surrounded by native and ornamental trees.

The Walled Garden contains Victorian varieties of espalier and cordon-trained fruit trees together with colourful herbaceous borders and two reconstructed greenhouses. The Visitor Centre and toilets were opened in 2015 and are located here.

An octagonal summerhouse nestles beneath an old cedar on the Summerhouse Lawn, which is surrounded by leafy beds of mature shrubs and trees.

The formal Rose Garden is planted with Victorian themed varieties and is the oldest part of the Garden.

Behind the Rose Garden is Jacob's Well, thought to be the original cistern feeding the fountain in the Dutch Garden. An archway leads back to the Dutch Garden and the secluded Poet's Corner.

Geometric swirls of box and closely clipped yew form a sunken parterre in the Dutch Garden, best seen from the viewing platform or the long walks. It was replanted to the design sketched by Gertrude Jekyll when she visited in 1912. The long border, fronted by standard wisteria trees, is a vibrant backdrop in summer.

The Wilderness is a shady grove, designed for wandering and reflection. The central archway of hoops with trained laburnums leads to a small grotto.
